A surgical mask is a medical equipment. Produced as per standard NF EN 14683, it is designed to prevent the wearer from spreading droplets in the vicinity. It also protects the wearer from droplets produced by a person directly in front of them.

However, depending on the circumstances, it does not protect from inhaling the very small particles suspended in the air that potentially carry the virus. There are three different types of surgical masks*:

Type I: bacteria filtering effectiveness > 95%.

Type II: bacteria filtering effectiveness > 98%.

Type IIR: bacteria filtering effectiveness > 98% and splash-resistant.
